MISPLACED PATRIOTISM.—It is impossible to be certain of the sublime. A Pawtucket Engine Company owned a golden eagle. Not the metallic $20, which has taken wings, and is unquestionably rare, but a magnificent live national bird, seven feet from tip to tip. They bought it with a view to having it killed and stuffed. To its rescue came Mr. Dorsey, the prisoner's friend, who, like Dido, not ignorant of misfortune, has learned to succor the unfortunate. He believed in stuffed turkeys, but not in stuffed eagles, and he purchased this one for the equivalent $20—half gold, half greenbacks. Then Mr. Dorsey advertised his purpose to see the noble bird, and forewarned all people that on Thursday at noon the eagle should be liberated.

At the appointed day and hour a vast crowd assembled. A New York gentleman read a poem composed by a Providence lady, "dedicated to the Eagle now in bondage, but soon to be released to soar to realms of broad blue, to envy to other birds an account of the bounty of Mr. Dorsey, the prisoner's friend, and the Peabody of Pawtucket." It commenced:

"Spread thy wings to the winds of Heaven,
Proud bird!
On the pinions of Liberty rise;
Soar away from the bounds of mortal power,
To a home in thy native skies."

The band played "Hail Columbia," and amid the cheers of the crowd the liberated eagle rose. But Pawtucket was his Capua, and luxury had demoralized him. He yielded to gravity and fat, and sat down on a house-top, not a hundred yards away. Irreverent boys snatched him, and he rose again, while the band played "Yankee Doodle." But "weight will tell," and, after a flutter, he landed in an elm tree. There it is positively too bad—he caught in the twigs, and hung a suspended and wretched cub. A youth climbed to his release, but the ungainly bird attacked him with beak and talons. Again the hurrahs, the music; and the eagle arose, this time for the last but soon settled down on the ground, gave out entirely, resigned his freedom, and disgraced his nationality, and was taken back to the engine house, subject to the order of Mr. Dorsey.—N. Y. Tribune.

MORTALITY AMONG CHILDREN.—Dr. Snow, medical registrar of Providence, commenting upon the excessive mortality of children under five years of age, (who, as most of our readers probably know, constitute on an average more than half of the total death list,) after stating that "summer complaints" are charged with more mischief than is their exclusive due, and that lung fever, convulsions, and congestive diseases of the brain and other organs, "destroy far more children than cholera, influenza, and diarrhoea," describes one potent local agency in the following paragraph, which we urgently commend to the attention of fashionable mothers:

"The truth is the chief cause of infantile mortality is not more the weather or foul air than the ignorance and false pride of the mothers. Children are killed by the manner in which they are dressed and by the food that is given them, as much as by any other causes. Infants of the most tender age, in their changeable and rough climate, are left with bare arms and legs, and with low neck dresses. The mothers in the same dress shiver and suffer with cold, and expect a fit of sickness as the result of their culpable carelessness. And yet the mothers could endure such a treatment with far less danger to the health and life than their tender infants."

By this exposure of the extremities, in which the circulation is always less active than in parts nearer the heart, not only is an undue amount of animal heat lost by radiation, but the blood is driven in excess to internal organs, often with the most disastrous result.—New York World.

GEORGE M. BEDFORD, of Bourbon County, Kentucky, states the Paris True Kentuckian, a few days ago submitted his cattle to a test by which he obtained the weight of water drunk by them. At half-past eight o'clock in the morning he weighed three yearling bulls; then watered them and put them on the scales the second time. Before drinking, Duke of Goodness weighed 1,705 lbs.; Cherry Duke 1,675 lbs.; and Inevitable Duke 1,525 lbs. After drinking, Duke of Goodness weighed 1,745 lbs.; Cherry Duke 1,720 lbs.; and Inevitable Duke 1,570 lbs. With one animal the increased weight was forty pounds, and with the other two forty-five pounds each. At this rate of increase it would make a vast difference in the price of a herd sold by the pound whether purchased and weighed in the morning before or after drinking. Water is a cheap commodity, but it becomes valuable when disposed of by the pound at the price paid for cattle.

LEWIS LINDSEY "ON THE LEGISLATURE."—Lewis is reported to have uttered the following opinion of our Legislature:

"Well, folks thinks I'm sorry because I didn't cut it here, but they certainly is mistaken. It's impertinent to me 'bout gittin' in here, because I ain't no demigod. I ain't workin' for office, and don't care whether I gits one or not. When the Conventional Convention was here they used to let at us a heap, but I tell you what I do look at this Legislature, and if they did let at us this Legislature ain't no quarantine for me to go by."
